Washington Feb. 20. 07.

Sir,

The American Philosophical society at Philadelphia has long been endeavoring to make up a complete skeleton of the Mammoth, and have nearly an entire one; but some very important bones are still wanting, chiefly of the head and feet. It is believed these might be found at the big bone lick, your property. If the search could be permitted, it is to ask that permission on their behalf that I now address you. Capt. Clarke, the companion of Capt. Lewis, now here promises me to go in person & attend to the search, and to see that it is not extended farther than to satisfy the views of the society; and that your indulgence shall not be abused. If you think proper to give us this permission, I would ask it by return of post, lest Capt. Clark should have set out, and indeed, it is possible that he would go further and ask the favor of you to direct good as to send a duplicate order to your agent at the place by post direct, lest the one forwarded to me should not come in time. Accept my salutations and assurances of great respect.
