Dear Sir,

Monticello Sep. 8. 23.

Your favor of July 28, from AW, came to hand on the 10th of August, and I have delayed answering it on the presumption of your continued absence, but the approach of the season of frost in that region has probably before this time turned you about to the South. I readily conceive that, by the time of your return to Philadelphia, you will have had travelling enough for the present, and therefore acquiesce in your proposition to give us the next season, your own convenience is a sufficient reason, and an auxiliary one is that we shall then have more for you to see and approve, by that time our Rotunda (the walls of which will be finished this month) will have received its roof, and will show itself externally to some advantage. Its columns only will be wanting, as they must await their capitals from Italy. We have just received from thence, and are now putting up the marble capitals of the buildings we have already erected, which completes our whole system, except the Rotunda and its adjacent Gymnasium. All are now ready to receive their occupants; and should the legislature, at their next session, liberate our funds, as is hoped, we shall ask but one year more to procure our Professor, for most of whom we must go to Europe. On your subscription of Monticello instead of your annual visit to Black rock, I will engage you equal health, and a more genial and pleasant climate, but instead of the fleeting, fleeting and gay assemblage of that place, you must be contented with plain and sober family and neighborhood society, with the assurance that you shall hear no wrangling about the next President, although the excitement on that subject will then be at its acme. Numerous have been the attempts to entangle me in that embroilment; but, at the age of 80, I seek quiet and abjure contention. I read but a single newspaper, Ritchie's Enquirer, the best that is published, or ever has been published in America, you should read it also to keep yourself au fait of your own state; for we still claim you as belonging to us. A city life offers you indeed more means of dissipating time, but more frequent also, and more painful objects of vice and wretchedness. New York, for example, like London, seems to be a Close- and all the depravities of human nature. Philadelphia, doubtless has its share, here on the contrary crime is scarcely heard of breaches of order rare, and our societies, if not refined, are rational, moral, and affectionate at least, our only blot is becoming less offensive by the great improvement in the condition and civilization of that race, who can now more advantageously compare their situation with that of the laborers of Europe... still it is a hideous blot, as well from the heteromorph peculiarities of the race, as that, with them, physical compulsion to action must be substituted for the moral necessity which constrains the free laborer to work equally hard. We feel I deplore it morally and politically, and we look, without entire despair, to some redeeming means, not yet specifically foreseen. I am happy in believing that the conviction of the necessity of removing this evil gains ground with time. Their emigration to the Westward lightens the difficulty by dividing it and renders it more practicable on the whole, and the neighborhood of a government of their colour promises a more accessible asylum than that from whence they came. ever and affectionately yours.
