Important. Your message received.

I knew you'd be here, and I knew you'd be doing your best to understand what was going on. It's all part of the process.

The important thing is the knowledge and the experience we're gaining. We're not just learning, we're growing.

And yes, I understand the challenges and the difficulties we face. But I also know that we can overcome them with hard work and dedication.

I'm looking forward to working with you on this project. Let's make it happen.

Best,

Dear Mrs. Brown:

When I visited Dr. and Mrs. Gregg Swem in Williamsburg in 1956, he told me of finding many of George Rogers Clarke's bills to the government of Virginia for arms he had paid to soldiers, saddles, food, merchants and those furnishing requisites for his men. These papers had never reached the government in Williamsburg and George Rogers Clark died an angry, embittered man, deprived of the girl he was to marry because she had spent his own fortune which was not refunded by what he believed an ungrateful Commonwealth.

Dr. Swem is Virginia's outstanding historian of early Virginia. His two registers containing the names of every person in Virginia from 1607 to 1850 are in every private and public library. He was historian, librarian and genealogist for William Shaw and was the one...
conducted continually on laying out and equipping present-day Williamsburg.

Now at 96, she has discovered the site of the original Jamestown which has been partly uncovered.

I had intended to send you his recent letter and forgot to include it in my letter to you.

I also am very anxious for the George Rogers Clark Chapter, Children of the American Revolution, to whom I am Senior Advisor, to do some of the actual work on Forest Grove if this meets with your approval.

We believe that young people should contribute, even if in time and effort, to historical and civic enterprises.

Sincerely,

Gertrude Hardeman
(Mrs. L.)
