MISS ENDICOTT.

Miss Endicott was not well, as if she were to believe her friends and neighbors, she had been out in the garden, and as for fitting, she said she never could give her up because she never had taken it up.

If I know what she must be, I must assume she has had some such thing as a cold in her life, and it is likely she will not do much more of it. I have heard of many women who were not well, and the last I heard of her she was in the garden, and I have seen her in the garden before, and she was always the same, but now she was not, and I have heard her say she was not feeling well, and I suppose that is as well as I can tell about it. If she is a little off her feed, I must say I am sorry for her, and I hope she will get well again. If I do not see her for a week, I shall be sorry for her, and I hope she will get well again.

MISS ENDICOTT.

Miss Endicott was out, and I think she must be very ill, she was not well, and I have heard of many women who were not well, and she is likely to be very ill. If she were not well, I must say I am sorry for her, and I hope she will get well again. If I do not see her for a week, I shall be sorry for her, and I hope she will get well again.

A Problem of the Times

May Her Life to Young Husband's Hands Be Given

To be told that the same poor cruel fate which brought the death of the wife of the man whom she loved and left him a widower, was now to befall his child, was more than he could bear. He had always been a kind and gentle man, and his heart was broken by the thought of his daughter's fate. He had always been a careful parent, and had done all in his power to provide for her future. But now, when she was just beginning to enjoy the fruits of his labors, he was called to leave her. He had always been a lover of nature, and had often taken her with him on his walks. But now, he had to leave her behind. He had always been a man of faith, and had often prayed for her. But now, he had to leave her with the world. He had always been a man of love, and had loved her with all his heart. But now, he had to leave her with the world, and alone.
