Student Group Hold Monday Night Talks

A new form of activity which gives promise of developing into a regular feature on the campus has been initiated in the form of a student-faculty discussion group. The group meets weekly in the Dodge Room of Phi Beta Kappa under the leadership of William and Mary faculty members.

The idea came principally as a result of a student, Paul Bock, who was an active leader in the writings and consequent formation of the Cradle Will Rock by Marc Blitzstein. A student-faculty discussion group was formed in the Dodge Room of Phi Beta Kappa under the leadership of William and Mary faculty members.

The play caused a certain amount of controversy on campus; at one time the production was threatened with censorship. The production was eventually permitted to proceed as planned, but with certain changes in the script.

The purpose of the Cradle Will Rock play was to bring attention to the social and political problems of the time, and to provide a forum for the expression of differing views.

The Cradle Will Rock play was produced in the theater, where it received a mixed reception. The critics were divided in their opinions, some praising the play for its social consciousness and others criticizing it for its stark realism.

There are such writers here, but we haven't heard tell of when they say they don't want to. Students on campus opinion and editorial. It's too hard that each week something else has to happen. As far as the Student Government is weak, as are most activities—

As far as the student government is concerned we want something that can be held down and form. A feeling that they can have and form a program, policy, and organization. This is not a matter of force on the women. Near the students lack of interest in the government. It is exemplified in the amount of participation in the other activities. We support and gladly give full publicity to any student organization, but we reserve the right—no self-emptowering either —as we certify our special candidate.

You know there have been a considerable number of who are facing a freshman class and the boys lost interest in the political atmosphere—

We've always had politics of all sorts among the boys. Now in this atmosphere we find the political situation —
