The Virginia Informer investigates the cost of attendance.

Joe Lappino-Exposito
Assistant Editor in Chief

The bill comes once a semester, giving every student (or at least their parents) a few line items that they will have to pay for in order to attend The College of William and Mary for the next few months. They are basic; tuition, room, board, and other fees and fines like room damages.

Yet within that tuition charge there are a slew of fees that are not clearly labeled. Although the school makes no attempt to even hide them, outlining them and really considering all of the fees borders on impossible.

The Athletic Fee

“Sports are fun and all, but there are more important things that the money should be used for,” said sophomore Ian Whiteside, when shown the general fee outline which includes a charge of $504 per semester for “Intercollegiate Athletics.”

An Institution in Debt

“We pledge certain revenues... so we issue bond debt, typically 20 years in length.” “The revenues to pay off that debt, in the case of dormitories, are on auxiliaries... student fees in other words.” Director of Finance Bert Brummer is well versed in this subject, but students are not. How do construction projects play into the larger cost of the college?

Cost of Getting an Education

William and Mary is one of the best institutions of higher learning in the country. However, it also faces a distinct challenge because it is also a state school. This contributes to the constant, seemingly exponential growth of tuition from year to year. What attributes to the rising cost, especially as classes are cut and less professors are retained from year to year?

ARE THE BRICKS MADE OF GOLD?
A look into the rising cost to attend William and Mary. Part one in a series.

Why can William and Mary not stay competitive on these fronts? What other costs stop us from raising faculty salaries?

Fun and Games Have a Price Too

Most people on this campus are active in one way or another. There are so many clubs, teams, and organizations to choose from that you would be hard-pressed to find out that does not fit your interest. That may be great for us to enjoy when we do not think about the cost. Why do some organizations get more funding than others? What publications give bloated salaries to their employees, who are only students? These are questions that need to be asked.

A State School

Unfortunately, like any government institution, William and Mary is not exempt from the typical bureaucracy that exists on all levels. It also needs to deal with budget cuts and has to be very politically entrenched to ensure that no matter who is in power, the money will still get to Williamsburg. every year. Does this link with the state tie down the potential of the College? Good William and Mary prosper if it could break the state’s quota for state resident students and include more of state students? Will the Charter Initiative get us there?

These are only a few of the areas that I will cover as the lead investigator on this case. No other publication has dared to look into these attributes to the constant, seemingly exponential growth of tuition.

There is hope yet – this series will delve into these issues.

Informer: Thanks for agreeing to do the interview with us – we know you’re a busy man (?).
Tribe Tonight: No problem. The summer’s winding down and the hangover is wearing off. I’m a guy. My stepmom, Tribe Today, is a girl. She’s dead though.
Informer: Some people have said you are dead, too.
Tribe Tonight: It seemed like I was there for a while. The problem was created by the combination of a spring party deficit and a suspicious glitch in AIM users’ ability to view me on their buddy lists.

Informer: Why suspicious?
Tribe Tonight: Well, it just happened one day – I started disappearing off people’s buddy lists. I troubleshooted this crazy, called AOL, examined every possible reason and I couldn’t identify why people couldn’t see me on their lists. One farfetched – but plausible – explanation is the W&M administrations’ connections to America Online (a Virginia-based company).

Informer: Sounds like a conspiracy theory, no?
Tribe Tonight: Well I don’t have any other way to explain it – it doesn’t seem to matter as much now. People are seeing me on their lists again, and even if they can’t, they can manually look it up by hitting Alt-O and typing my name or going to “People” –> “Get Buddy Info”.

Informer: Why was Tribe Tonight created?
Tribe Tonight: I, like many others, was tired of people complaining about the lack of social life and parties at W&M. I knew parties were going on, but that lack of social life and parties at W&M. I knew parties were going on, but that there was no communication vehicle to get party info from one sub-clique of the campus to another. Tribe Tonight was created to inform W&M students about various debauchery happening on and off campus. Keg parties, soirées, dance parties, or anything of interest to those who might attend a party are all fair game. I get the info from people who...
“Tribe” nickname in jeopardy

The National Collegiate Athletic Association is determined to remove Indian mascots from college athletics in any way that it can. In a surprising mandate on August 5, 2005, the NCAA Executive Committee prohibited NCAA colleges and universities from “displaying hostile and abusive racial/ethnic/national origin mascots, nicknames or imagery at any of the 88 NCAA championships.”

Schools who have offensive themes displayed by mascots, uniforms, cheerleaders and dance teams are prohibited from hosting a championship competition, beginning February 1, 2006. By August 2008, schools with such references will be forbidden to wear or display them at any NCAA championship. This legislation affects the 18 institutions that have been declared to have hostile and offensive mascots. (See box). In November 2004, 33 schools with Indian-related mascots and/or team nicknames were investigated. William and Mary is currently still under investigation for its “Tribe” nickname. The new legislation will not affect the College until the end of a six-month extension that athletic director Terry Driscoll received due to the transition of power to new president Gene Nichol.

The NCAA hopes that this legislation will encourage more self-study. The 18 schools affected by these guidelines have six months to appeal their status. Myles Brand, NCAA president, admits that not all names may indeed be offensive. “Some American Indian tribes have expressed their approval of the manner in which their names and imagery are used by specific institutions,” Brand said in a press release, specifically citing Florida State University, home of the Seminoles. William and Mary is another example. Local Indians do not find the name offensive. “When we take care of some of the poverty and crime and drug problems and that sort of thing in this country, then we’ll worry about names,” William P. “Bill” Miles, chief of the Pamunkey Indians, told The Richmond Times-Dispatch. Driscoll has not received direct complaints about the name. The Tribe used to be known as the Indians and the football field used to be referred to as the “Reservation.” The logo, which now features a pair of green and gold feathers, used to be a grinning Indian. Colonel Ebirt is the replacement for a mascot dressed in Indian regalia.

After President Nichol has been in office a few months, this issue will have to be readdressed. The future of Colonel Ebirt hangs in the balance.

Lights to become a permanent fixture at Zable

Benjamin Farthing
Staff Writer

On Gene Nicholl's first day as president he asked one of the student interns to name something in the school's future that he was excited about.

"The new lights on the football field," came the immediate response. "The night game against JMU last fall was just awesome," W&M News, 7/11/05

This fall, that student intern will have good reason to be excited.

The College of William and Mary Athletics Department recently received $650,000 in donations to install lights at Zable Stadium and at the football practice field.

In the past, the College has opted against the installation of lights, to conform to Williamsburg law. Since the College is on state ground, it technically does not need to conform to Williamsburg building regulations. However, Randy Strickland, Construction Manager for the College, stated that "it is the policy of the school to meet the requirements of the City of Williamsburg."

School officials are currently in the process of obtaining a permit for the lighting project. Strickland said that school officials will be meeting with city officials and groups of citizens to discuss the lighting system, and the effect it will have on the city.

The planned systems will provide the necessary light for night games and practices with the least amount of light pollution to the surrounding area. "We're looking at different heights and light configurations to make it as unobtrusive as possible," said Strickland.

The semifinal football game of last season, played under lights brought in by ESPN2, was a nationally televised sellout. Strickland, Construction Manager for the College, stated that "the new lights on the football field," came the immediate excitement of night football can have on the city.

If all goes smoothly, the excitement of night football can continue on November 5.

The combination of night football, a nationally ranked team, and the leadership of head coach Jiminy Laycock brought students and fans flocking to Zable Stadium.

If all goes smoothly, the excitement of night football can continue on November 5, the first possible night the permitting process will be complete. It will also be the remark of last year's semifinal game against James Madison University.

On that night, Tribe football fans will find the light they have been searching for, and night football at William and Mary will become a tradition.

Georgia Congressman John Lewis to speak at Convocation

For second straight year choice very political

Nick Fitzgerald

Congressman John Lewis, who represents Georgia's 5th District in the House of Representatives, has been asked to speak at the College's 2005 convocation on August 27.

Representative Lewis has a very extensive history in the area of civil rights. During the 1960s, at the height of the civil rights movement, Rep. Lewis became chairman of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, also known as SNCC. Additionally, he was named one of the "Big Six" leaders of the civil rights movement, another one of whom was Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

At the age of 23, Rep. Lewis was also the chief organizer of, and keynote speaker at, the famous March on Washington in 1963, at which Dr. King gave his famous "I Have a Dream" speech. Because of his work for the civil rights movement, after facing more than 40 arrests, physical injury, and mob violence, Rep. Lewis was awarded the John F. Kennedy "Profiles in Courage" award for lifetime achievement.

The United States Congress is not the first governing body to which Rep. Lewis has been elected. Elected to the Atlanta City Council in 1961, Lewis focused on ethics in government and neighborhood preservation. After that, Rep. Lewis campaigned for a seat on the House of Representatives, and, in 1986, was elected to Congress. He has served as a lawmaker for 18 years.

The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), regarded universally as a liberal organization, gave Congressman Lewis a 98% lifetime rating—meaning, Congressman Lewis voted in sync with the ACLU's position on a number of key issues 98% of the time over his 18-year career. By contrast, the American Conservative Union gave Congressman Lewis a 2% lifetime rating.

As for some examples of the Rep. Lewis' voting record, when President Bush asked the Congress in fall of 2003 for an additional $87 billion to finance the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, Rep. Lewis voted definitively against it. On October 16, 2003, on the floor of the House, Rep. Lewis had the following to say: "Mr. Speaker, in good conscience— I cannot and will not support President Bush's misled, failed policy. …[The Bush Administration] deceived Members of Congress, the American people, and the community of nations. It is time to hold President Bush accountable for his words and his deeds. I cannot and will not vote for $87 billion for more killing and for war."

In comparison, fellow Democratic counterparts in the Senate such as former presidential candidate John Kerry (MA) and Edward Kennedy (MA) also voted against the bill.

On March 18, 2004, Rep. Lewis made a speech to the House on the eve of the one-year anniversary of the invasion of Iraq. "The dead and wounded," he said, "are not the only casualties of the President's decision to invade Iraq…Something else has been lost. Truth. Honesty. Integrity." He also warned both the Congress and the American people that "we cannot believe a word they say [members of the Bush Administration] say….And it's not just Iraq, it's almost every issue—every comment—every deed. We cannot believe a word they say," he reiterated. Although originally the CIA supplied the Bush Administration with intelligence concerning weapons of mass destruction, Congressman Lewis has made no remarks concerning government accountability to this effect.

More recently, Rep. Lewis participated in a Jesse Jackson-sponsored march and rally in Atlanta on August 6, in an effort to support congressional renewal of all provisions of the Voting Rights Act. This act, which abolished literacy tests, grandfather clauses, and poll taxes during the civil rights era, is set to expire in 2007. This event was also in protest of a new Georgia law, which requires a photo I.D from an individual before he is allowed to vote. Entertainer Harry Belafonte and Judge Greg Mathis were also present at the rally with Lewis, both of whom had harsh comments on the controversial law.

"We're looking at different heights and light configurations to make it as unobtrusive as possible," said Strickland.

know about the parties and email me (tribetonight@gmail.com) or IM me with the details.

Informer: Doesn’t that open the door for low-key parties to get invaded by random people from AIM?

Tribe Tonight: People bitch at me all the time about this. My answer is: probably not. Listen, if you see something on my away message at a house or room that doesn’t look outright somewhat familiar, what are the odds you’ll actually show up? Let’s pretend you do, and you walk into someone’s dimly lit house where in the living room 8 people you’ve never met are sitting on couches, sipping Pinot Noir, wearing berets and listening to jazz, you’re probably going to want to get the fuck out of there because it’ll be an awkward social situation. I’ll take down any party listing if the host is overly concerned, but people with several legs who open up their houses to everyone but still want to keep some level of exclusivity – I have no tolerance for those people and they need to shut the fuck up. If you don’t like who shows up, tell them to leave. End of story. A party is a party. Life is short; college life is much shorter. Get over yourself and start experimenting.

Informer: Don’t the cops know about you? Doesn’t the away message give them a nice cheat sheet on Friday night?

Tribe Tonight: If you’re having a party off campus that’s large enough, it will probably get busted anyway, but it is a real concern. Wow can we have an open form of communicating entertainment on campus while protecting the privacy of party hosts? I personally know that I’ve been to enormous keggers listed on Tribe Tonight that were never busted. Scapegoating Tribe Tonight as the source of the bust doesn’t address the real problem going on here: the city of Williamsburg is tightening its rules to make it almost impossible for students to have fun off-campus.

Informer: You created a political agenda with Tribe Tonight – you even endorsed candidates for the SA elections, which got a lot of criticism.

Aren’t you selling out?

Tribe Tonight: No. We, as students, can no longer afford to neglect the reality that our social well-being and the decisions of those we elect are intimately intertwined. It is a fact that arrests for minor alcohol related offenses and noise violations have skyrocketed. It is a fact that city council members, such as Professor Clyde Haulman have pushed for laws defining a gathering of 10 people or more as a “large party.”

Informer: And we have to ask: Are you Luther Lowe?

Tribe Tonight: No. We’re friends, and Luther has helped it get off the ground, but no.

Informer: When will you reveal your identity?

Tribe Tonight: Probably never. It will be passed on and kept alive as long as possible. The principle of promoting openess and fun at college is the point, and the people behind it are irrelevant.

For the better part of three centuries, ambitious students at William & Mary have said, “Today: college, tomorrow: the world.” For one particular group of students, the promise of seeing the world – and defending freedom – is a reality for tomorrow.

Today these students are the cadets of the Revolutionary Guard Battalion’s Army ROTC unit. ROTC stands for Reserve Officers’ Training Corps, a college academic department offered at universities across the United States to produce officers for the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps. All ROTC students study a particular academic discipline, coupled with a major field of study at the college designed by the United States Army that combines leadership and management skills with military knowledge. Students also participate in fitness programs designed to keep cadets within the Army’s demanding physical fitness regulations. This unique course of study instills self-discipline and character, provides leadership opportunities and builds confidence in each cadet’s own ability to succeed; this cultivates useful skills in the Army upon graduation and in civilian life.

Courses instructed by active duty military personnel provide valuable training for cadets not only to become outstanding Army officers, but also gain tools for success in life outside the military. While college work teaches military science, the presentations and class public speaking and writing required to complete this project builds self-confidence, strong leaders, and the people behind it are irrelevant.

TRUE LEADERS: W&M Army ROTC teaches unique leadership skills needed in battle and organize and evaluate weekly labs and monthly physical tests.

Both labs and physical training (PT) are designed to promote combat readiness in future officers. Labs are held every week for 2 hours, often along the Mataoa trails at the College. Combat drills, planned ambushes, paintball battle engagements, and simulated POW experiences, including detainment, searches, questioning and transport during labs teach practical lessons that cannot be absorbed from a textbook. Similarly, PT sessions add to the comprehensive education that ROTC offers. Each week, three early morning PT sessions help cadets prepare for monthly Army Physical Fitness Tests (APFT). The mandatory number of PT sessions per week depends on the level of study of the cadet. Senior cadets are required to attend all three weekly sessions, whereas freshmen cadets need only attend one, so long as they are able to meet the APFT criteria. The main focus of PT is not just physical fitness, but also cultivating camaraderie and teamwork that builds a cohesive unit.

Achievement in academic and physical tasks in ROTC during their freshman and sophomore years can have added benefit for cadets. At the beginning of their junior year, cadets must commit to service upon graduation in exchange for a scholarship that pays for most of tuition and books and provides a monthly living stipend. To remain on scholarship, cadets must upload a minimum 2.5 GPA and follow all guidelines for their chosen major. After completing their junior year, cadets attend a summer officer training course at an active Army base, such as Fort Lewis, WA. This course tests officer readiness – how prepared a cadet is to become an officer – through night time and daytime land navigation, hikes in fully-equipped battle dress, simulated combat situations and other scenarios. The strength and determination necessary to overcome the many challenges of ROTC comes not only from the incentive of a college scholarship (up to $20,000 per year plus $900 book allowance), but also from the unique benefits of military service.

ROTC leadership winners agree to repay the US Government for their education through military service. Currently, Congress mandates that Army ROTC leadership winners must serve either four years of active duty and four years on reserve status or eight years on reserve status. The benefits of this service and ROTC training for cadets are numerous. Upon completion of study and graduation, ROTC leadership winners have a guaranteed job, an accomplishment that not many of their civilian classmates can boast. As an officer, today’s cadets will find themselves in many unique situations that require quick adaptation to changing circumstances and the ability to reason and solve the problem at hand. By far, through ROTC leadership, students learn different aspects of leadership, including what they are and are not responsible for accomplishing. "The most rewarding part of being in ROTC for me, and my motivating factor, is serving my country and knowing that one day the person standing beside me will need me and I’ll be able to be there for him or her." ROTC leaders today are the cadets of the Revolutionary Guard Battalion’s Army ROTC unit.

Catch a movie at the Kimball Theatre

Joe Pirro

For all its ecclectic rows and unique restaurants, there is one immutable fact about our dear home: Williamsburg is not your typical college town. True, there are the theme parks that we hardly attend and the stores and restaurants at the other end of Richmond Road; but for those of us without a car, the options are even more limited. In the past, to catch the latest blockbuster we had to hop on a bus to the movie theatre. It’ll be easier to catch your favorite movies once the new Consolidated Theatre opens up, but there’s a special place nearby that is unknown to many students.

A great entertainment venue, the Kimball Theatre lies right in the middle of Merchant Square in Colonial Williamsburg. From live “history interpreters” portraying Thomas Jefferson and Patrick Henry, to symphony performances and great independent movies, the Kimball may be my favorite place in Williamsburg. It might be difficult to convince anyone but a film fanatic of this fact, but the Kimball Theatre does indeed offer an incredible array of choices.

The theatre’s history is tied to that of the College. The first performance held at the newly created Kimball in 1933 was a student production of “The Recruiting Officer.” Theatre is still alive and well at the Kimball. Last year, I attended an impressive student production of Ridley Scott’s “Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?”

3 Doors Down comes to Virginia

Hartford, Connecticut

In a world where rock stars believe that selling millions of albums gives them the authority to lecture the world on foreign and domestic policy, 3 Doors Down is a breath of fresh air. Rather than using their captive audience as a test group for liberal or anti-American theorecs, the group simply does what it is paid to do: sing.

On July 16, the Dodge Music Center in Hartford, Connecticut, was filled to capacity with an ecclectic mix of fans. Each of the three opening acts had an increasingly loud following, although the combination of No Address, Breaking Benjamin, and Staind fell squarely in the hard-rock genre, unlike the headliners. No Address was a typical Korn opener, virtually unknown to most of the audience, with none of the handful of songs in their repertoire recognizable as anything more than a spin-off of a similar song by a more famous band.

Breaking Benjamin, however, proved themselves worthy of the radio play they currently enjoy. Most of the songs they played were high energy hard rock songs, but the group’s best piece was the slightly more melodic and less intense radio hit, “Sooner or Later.”

Any spectators who arrived late to skip the opening acts still made sure to arrive by 9:30 when Staind took the stage before a filled amphitheatre. The band’s hour long set proved they were strong enough to hold their own before the headliners. The songs that got the warmest receptions were the old mellow favorites such as “So Far Away” and “It’s Been A While.” The harder rock selections from the new album were shocking to those who associate Staind with a mid-90’s rock band.

3 Doors Down was truly worthy of the coveted position of headliner. Their hour and a half set was a well-rounded play list of old and new. While covering new hits off this spring’s album, Be Like That, such as “Right where I belong” and “Let me go,” the band paid tribute to the old favorites that put them on the map, especially 2000’s “Kryptonite” and several hits from their successful sophomore album, Away From The Sun.

The set perfectly complemented the music. A set of giant fire wheels which turned, lit, and sparked were used to accent certain songs along with lights, fire, and fireworks. Despite it’s dazzle, the set was low key enough to not take away from lead singer Brad Arnold’s vocals and guitarist Matt Roberts’s solos.

A truly All-American band, 3 Doors Down goes beyond the glitter and fireworks to recognize real stars. While playing “When I’m Gone,” the band offered a stunning tribute to our men and women in uniform, and ended the night by choosing, “God Bless America.” Although it was one of the lesser publicized tours of the summer, 3 Doors Down is a concert you don’t want to miss.

Everyone seems to have his or her own special place to spend on campus. Whether it is a dorm room, Swens, an academic building, or a cafe, students will soon be filling familiar places with the start of fall classes. What better way to start a new year, than with a new place to study in a place that may be unfamiliar to you… until now?

Many of you may have seen the signs for Steeps Tea Tavern & Elixir Bar in Colonial Williamsburg. Steeps is a restaurant managed by the same individuals that run Aroma’s on Prince George Street. This tavern is a wonderful addition to the numerous places for students to study, as well as socialize. Within the restaurant, there is internet access and music playing quietly in the background. The atmosphere is inviting, with numerous tables for seating inside as well as outside.

Steeps carries over sixty different varieties of tea, including white, green, black, and herbal. The flavors range from citrus to the every day Earl Grey and English Breakfast. They even carry a red tea from South Africa – Rooibos. Another feature of Steeps is their elixirs. There are several varieties; Liquid Yoga, Depth Recharger, Power Plant, and Mind over Muddle, just to name a few. Other drink options include a variety of specialty coffees, bubbly tea, fruit smoothies, and bottled drinks. Within the next few weeks, Steeps will begin to offer alcoholic beverages, such as martini in flavors like peppermint and chocolate.

Steeps also provides a small food menu with healthy options, including wraps, salads, and light breakfast items. In the tradition of Aroma’s, they also have a variety of desserts, candy, cookies, muffins, and chocolates.

Steeps Tea Tavern & Elixir Bar is great for students. It has all the benefits of your favorite study locations without the crowds. Steeps is located at 110 South Henry Street in the Henry Street Shops of Merchant Square and is open 9:00am to 9:00pm Monday through Saturday, and 10:00am to 6:00pm on Sundays.
Things to take advantage of while you’re here...

Most of us spend at least four years in this bustling little town... try out some of these places on and off campus to make your free time more enjoyable.

Colonial Williamsburg: also known as our backyard. We are fortunate enough to be living in the cradle of American History, and William and Mary students get to take advantage of it for free. If history interests you, you can get into any of the historic buildings as well as the DeWitt Wallace Museum of Decorative Arts by flashing your student I.D. (just make sure you have the 05-06 sticker on the back). There are a variety of shows and educational programs (try Cry Witch at the Capitol building, a live action recreation of a witch trial) throughout the year, and CW usually offers discounted tickets for students (visit www.history.org for more details). Duke of Gloucester street (Dog Street) is popular for running, jogging or strolling. On a nice day CW has plenty of places to study: on any of the benches lining Dog Street, the Governor’s Palace lawn, or the Governor’s Palace gardens.

FitWell Classes: Offered by Rec Sports, these are hour long classes in the FitWell Studio of William and Mary Hall. Choose from a variety of classes such as kickboxing, yoga and spinning. Each class costs $3, but you can purchase a semester pass ($45) or a yearly pass ($70) at the front desk at the Rec Center. Visit www.wm.edu/recsports for schedule and more information.

Career Center: Located in the basement of Blow Hall (Room 124) the Career Center is a useful source of guidance and information. You can call ahead to make an appointment with a Career Counselor to discuss anything from graduate schools to internships to long term career goals. They are also available for resume critiques. Feel free to visit their library to peruse materials on the same subjects. The Career Center runs several programs throughout the year, including a Local Internship Program, Resume and Interview workshops and career fairs. Sign up for their listserv to receive updates of jobs and internships in the area. Visit www.wm.edu/career for more information.

Barnes & Noble Cafe: The bookstore has more than just textbooks and there’s more than one place to get a cup of coffee in town. Visit the Barnes & Noble Cafe on the second floor of the Bookstore on Dog Street. They serve Starbucks products and a selection of light fare and snacks. It’s also a great place to study, especially in the mornings and afternoons on weekdays when there are fewer tourists. Bring your laptop and enjoy the wireless access; just make sure you have a full battery, as sometimes finding an outlet can be tricky.

Busch Gardens: This theme park is only miles from campus and features recreated European villages, shows, and of course rides, including the world famous roller coasters, Apollo’s Chariot and Alpengeist. Most students make an annual pilgrimage in the fall on William and Mary Day, where students can purchase tickets on campus at a fifty percent discount or more. On William and Mary Day, busses to and from the park are provided by the Student Assembly. On all other days, if you don’t have a car, you can take the Williamsburg Area Transport bus (Gray line).

During your time here, you will be bound to find more fun, exciting and interesting places to frequent on your own.

Welcome to William & Mary

Lovers’ mark on campus: A tree by the Crim Dell is etched with romance.

Tribe love...

Now that you’ve met all those new people, here are some suggestions if things turn toward the romantic

Walk around Colonial Williamsburg. Dog Street is the perfect place to kindle romance with lantern lit streets and quaint benches along the bricks.

Aroma’s Coffee Shop on Prince George Street has a large selection of specialty coffees and other drinks, along with many desserts to share. Try the chocolate fondu or S’Mores for two.

Go to the Trellis Restaurant on Dog Street for their infamous decadent dessert, Death by Chocolate. It’s definitely big enough to share.

Rent a canoe on Lake Matoaka, it’s free with your student ID.

Go to a movie at the Kimball Theatre on Dog Street. Two tickets and some popcorn will run you less than twenty dollars, and they often show date friendly Indie flicks.

And if you’re really into each other, walk across the Crim Dell Bridge...
What your OA forgot to tell you...
words of wisdom from The Virginia Informer

- Don't worry so much about your grades your first year; some places give you the option of removing your freshman year from your GPA when you apply for jobs and internships.
- Don't be afraid to speak up in class, even if you disagree with the professor.
- You were the best and brightest in your high school class, just like everyone else here. This idea takes some getting used to.
- Organize study groups: not only are they helpful to prepare for tests but you'll meet great people where you least expect to.
- You'll fill all those GER's... eventually.
- Don't underestimate the breadth of your interests; you'll never know if you like something until you try it.
- Take advantage of the Add/Drop period. Register for more credits than you want to take, go to all the classes and then decide which you want to take.
- Be more concerned with your classes than your schedule; don't take a bunch of boring classes just to have Fridays off.
- Avoid Morton and Small if possible.
- Try to take a class in Wren for history's sake.
- Blair is the nicest academic building and it has the best bathrooms.
- If you expect nothing less that A's you'll be sorely disappointed.
- The bus goes to more places than just Target (but it doesn't run on Sundays).
- William and Mary might seem like a big campus, but do something embarrassing and you'll find out how small it really is.
- Don't stay home when you can go out, even if it's just to meet a friend at the Daily Grind.
- You can always join a frat/sorority later on in the year or next year.
- Unless you want everyone to know that you're freshmen, don't head to the frats in large packs.
- Wren 10 is a great way to spend a Wednesday night.
- Don't get so caught up in the beauty of campus that you trip on the bricks.
- GIRLS: stiletto or kitten heals on the bricks... not the brightest idea.
- When they're showing a film on the Sunken Gardens go even if you don't like the movie, it has an old school drive-in feel.
- The campus movie station has some good movies on it and they replay them over and over again.
- Bond with your hallmates, many of them will be your closest friends.
- You will see the same people on your way to class every day, smile to them. They'll smile back.
- Take advantage of as many free or inexpensive events on campus as possible. You will never have access to as many films, dances, workshops, parties and cultural events again.
- Interpret the "Work hard, play hard" ethic however you like. Just remember, this is college, and you're supposed to have fun.

“Try new things... don't just do everything that you were good at in high school.”

A sample of religious groups on campus

The Alternative Spirituality Association
A forum for students interested in non-mainstream religious paths (wicca, paganism, reconstruction, etc.) to express themselves and explore their beliefs free from ridicule. All paths and all experience levels are invited, but an open mind is a must. Planned activities include a Samhain Festival, open rituals, visits to metaphysical shops, and meetings with other pagan groups. Meeting topics include: divination workshops, theological discussions, movie viewings, and pumpkin carving. We also have a book group.

Meetings: Every Tuesday at 8:00pm in Tucker Hall Room 202

Scofield vows “to unite the Student Assembly”

Shariff Tannish Business Manager

Gene Nichol isn’t the only new president at the College. Junior Ryan Scofield was elected Student Assembly President last April. He now begins a new year with a full agenda.

One of the most widely discussed issues on campus at the end of last year was diversity within the student body. The Senate passed a bill that created a Department of Diversity Initiatives as a part of the Executive. President Scofield wants to see this department become an integral part of the Student Assembly. “I see it continuing to grow and mature as a part of the Student Assembly. They have big goals of advocating for the students and I hope they are successful with their strong leadership.” The new Secretary of Diversity Initiatives, Lydia Bailey, was instrumental in creating and passing the bill. Because of her expertise, knowledge of the bill’s purpose, Scofield plans to defer most internal decisions to her.

The new president would like to work with administrations to attract more diverse students to William and Mary. One of the controversies surrounding the establishment of the Department of Diversity Initiatives was whether to include political minorities. Many students, namely conservatives, argued that they were victims of discrimination in the classroom due to differences of opinion with the professors. Scofield tackled this issue immediately upon his inauguration. “We made the decision for the beginning of this team to tackle this [Political Diversity] from the perspective of academic policy because we felt big that the biggest complaints dealt with is in class experiences. We named an Assistant Secretary of Academic Diversity (Part of the Dept. of Academic Policy) whose job would be to examine the situation with respect to types of academic diversity.”

Many class officers are curious to see how the new administration will work with other branches of student government: “I see it continuing to be a generator of collaboration.” Scofield is the first president with a position dedicated to promoting diversity within the student body. The Senate has big goals of advocating for the students and I hope they are successful with their strong leadership.”

to, or hope to find conflict with the Senate.” When asked about newly elected Senator Chairman, Luther Lowe, Scofield answered, “Luther has a lot of experience in the Student Assembly and I hope he’ll be able to lead the Senate morally and work towards the same goals I have of unifying the Student Assembly as one.”

As SA President, Scofield will be able to meet often with the new president of the College, Gene Nichol. The SA President had a chance to speak with President Nichol about some of his thoughts and plans. He feels that many of the traditions that returning-students cherish, and new students will come to love, will remain in place.

Scofield feels that he has an adequate forum with the new president and that the Student Assembly will be able to communicate with and cooperate with the new administration on many projects, such as recycling.

All in all Scofield is looking forward to his tenure as Student Assembly president. We can expect energetic leadership. Scofield claims that he likes to have fun. Scofield encourages students to bring their ideas and concerns forward and wants to see that the Student Assembly is here to represent and advocate for the students of the College.

SA begins new year with new goals

Seth Levey Staff Writer

August 24 will see the beginning of classes as well as the beginning of the new annals of Student Assembly history. This school year in particular will be a turning point as the Student Assembly begins its business with a new College president for the first time since 1992. How President E. G. Nichol will work with the SA is yet to be seen, but he follows in the footsteps of his predecessor, a bright new future for the students is in the horizon.

As the transition from Timothy J. Sullivan to Gene R. Nichol has taken place there have also been major changes in the Student Assembly. At the end of last semester Ryan Scott and Amanda Norris took office as Student Assembly President and Vice President. Both Scofield and Norris spent the last weeks of the semester preparing their administration for the new academic year. Included in their agenda are the possible inclusion of WM Express and Flex Points at more locations and a look at the provoking issue of diversity on campus. Two other promising projects include campus beautification and office hours, where students can speak and discuss important issues with the president and vice president.

An ongoing major act of the new administration was the creation of the Executive cabinet, most of which is in place for the new academic year.

While the executive branch goes through the almost routine yearly transition from president to president, the SA Senate will also have some different faces this year. The Senate has both a new Chairman, senior senator Luther Lowe, and a new Secretary, sophomore senator Joe Lapiaggi-Elmore. The senate will most surely have a full docket this year as both the senators and executive branch work with President Nichol to establish a relationship that will benefit all students.

During the summer there was a major breakthrough on an ongoing campus issue: recycling. For the past two years Kay Floyd, now an alumna, has been heading the project to develop the program and expand...
Welcome to The Virginia Informer, the newest monthly newspaper at the College of William and Mary. Although there are other publications at the College, so much important news goes unreported. It is nearly impossible for one paper to cover every single news item on a college campus, but we will fill in the gaps other news outlets have neglected and ignored. Our mission is to inform students of the stories that are important to them and to do so with quality journalism that is often lacking throughout modern media in Williamsburg and beyond.

While we are student run and produced, we have no loyalty to the administration: we aim to report the news that students need to know.

We vow to not take student funds to produce the paper; if you support us, do so independently. You may not always agree with us, and if you do not, we encourage you to let us know through letters to the editor. But please take the time to read what you see here and open your mind to new ideas. Be sure to challenge yourself and confront the issues as we present them.

Most importantly, we, of The Virginia Informer, vow to give you the best common sense news at the College of William and Mary since 1693.

Face the strange changes

For those of us coming back to Williamsburg after a long summer break elsewhere, it seems like the College has changed overnight. A school that usually dawdles on the one or two construction projects it runs at a time is now actually making progress on repairing a fire-destroyed dorm, building another dorm from the foundation up, building a parking garage and renovating the Rec Sports facility. More projects were completed over the summer.

Furthermore, it seems like William and Mary is finally trying to crawl out from under Colonial Williamsburg’s shadow. Now that we have a football team that has played on national television, we can shirk Williamsburg’s shadow. Now that we have more international students (although fewer nations represented). Our U.S. News and World Report ranking has risen from 41st in 1992 to 31st in 2004, and we now rank 6th among public universities. If you peruse Sullivan’s list of accomplishments you will find a long list of additions to the campus that occurred on Sullivan’s watch, including the University Center, McLothlin-Street Hall, and several of the statues that line our gardens and courtyards. For most students at the College, we cannot fathom what it was like before the UC, just as it is difficult for us to gauge Sullivan’s improvement: we weren’t here in 1992 to see how bad it might have been.

What we do know is that there is still plenty to be done. We rank 31st in the US News and World Report Rankings, which is an improvement over 41st, but still a long way from 1st. 6 out of the top 10 schools are Ivy League, and all of the top 10 schools have endowments in the billions while ours is a meager $401.5 million in comparison. As a public school we could never hope to have the financial resources to truly compete with the top schools. President Sullivan wanted to make William and Mary a world class university, and perhaps we are well on our way, but we still have plenty of public school problems. For those of us who chose William and Mary over a private school, oftentimes a highly selective or even an Ivy League school, how many times have we had a brief pang of regret as we see classes we want to take cut and professors we adore leave for other schools and better salaries.

How many times in a semester, in a month, in a week do we mumble to ourselves, if only we (the College) had more money, and if only the College spent what they did have wisely.

President Sullivan, or as students affectionately called him, “Timmy J,” was beloved at the College. As much as we all complain most of us love William and Mary, and its easier to blame all of the problems on an unknown number of faceless administrators rather than the man who danced with us at King and Queens Ball and walked around campus in the early mornings and usually had a minute of his time for a word with a concerned student.

William and Mary has a long way to go before we can rightfully call ourselves world class, but “Timmy J” has at least earned his legacy as a nice guy.

How great a legacy?

President Sullivan left office this summer credited with transforming William and Mary into a world class university. Many of the statistics are in his favor; on paper William and Mary seems to have improved by leaps and bounds. The College now draws brighter and more accomplished students, the percent of students in the top ten percent of their graduating classes rose from 73% to 85% during Sullivan’s tenure. We send more students to study abroad and we have more international students (although fewer nations represented). Our U.S. News and World Report ranking has risen from 41st in 1992 to 31st in 2004, and we now rank 6th among public universities.

All minorities are not created equal
Recognition of diversity on campus for only a select group of special interests

John R. Kennedy
Staff Writer

Notre Machiavelli once said, “Men rise from one ambition to another: first, they seek to secure themselves against attack, and then they attack others.” Today, the liberals who so often preached tolerance of other views now use the classroom as a venue of political coercion, growing increasingly intolerant of opposing viewpoints. To them, diversity and affirmative action are the only answers to minority issues; free speech, so long as it is liberal speech, is encouraged.

At William and Mary, diversity and affirmative action could be considered quite volatile issues. Considerable disagreements are present between many student groups and this is no more evident than in the Student Assembly (SA). In an attempt to address diversity concerns, in February 2005 the SA voted to create a Department of Diversity Initiatives. One of the goals of this department is to hear complaints from students who believe they have been victims of discrimination because of their gender, culture, religion, international background or sexual orientation.

At first glance the goal of this department is perfectly decent. Upon further examination, though, there certainly are problems. Sadly, the department fails to address the concerns of one group on campus that is being discriminated against quite frequently, a group that is victimized in and out of the classroom by the faculty and administration.

Political minorities, consisting largely of conservatives and libertarians, are frequently discriminated against and they still have no place to voice their concerns. With the establishment of this new department, the most frequently discriminated-against group on campus is being shut out of discussion once again.

In classrooms, professors often allow their personal beliefs to mix with their curriculum. Many examples of professor bias favoring liberalism have been noted by conservative groups on campus. In classes like those, conservatives are shut out. They are not encouraged to speak their views because their professors teach that secular humanism is the only true belief system—other systems of thought are out of line or oppressive. As a result, a very important segment of the community is silenced in order to support the views of another group and thus discrimination occurs.

It would be unwise to make such claims without providing some evidence, of course. Drawing from my own experiences, in a history class my professor allowed a member of the William and Mary chapter of NAACP to speak. This woman spoke about the need to support diversity and called on us to sign a petition favoring diversity that would be sent to the new president. The NAACP representative held a captive audience for over 15 minutes and asked each of us to sign her petition—this would be for the good of the school, supposedly.

Meanwhile, the administration ignores many other demonstrations that occur on campus throughout the year, mainly because they either agree with those protests or the message those protests expose is not as incisive as that of the Sol protest. Instead of allowing students to debate the issue as a community, the administration felt compelled to intrude and teach a “lesson” of sorts. “Certain students may feel this way, but the president of the college feels this way.” Furthermore, the former president, Tim Sullivan, patted himself on the back for even allowing the protests to occur in the first place, a disgraceful attitude to have regarding the free speech of students.

Discrimination is occurring at William and Mary and it needs to be addressed. Machiavelli would have perfectly understood what the liberals have done: in securing themselves from attack in the past, liberals guaranteed themselves the ability to attack others in the future. Unfortunately, they bastardized tolerance into an exceedingly intolerant institution and went on the attack just as Machiavelli would have predicted. Machiavelli lived in a very different time, but his statement outlines the path that liberal professors and administrations have taken across the country. If such movements toward conformity are not underlined by opposing viewpoints, the intellectual freedom of American universities could become that of Fidel Castro’s Cuba.

Rec Center getting into shape for 2006

Benjamin Farthing
Staff Writer

During the Fall 2005 and Spring 2006 semesters, the William and Mary Sports and Recreational Facility will be under major renovations. The main entrance will be on the Compton Road side of the building, said Linda Knight, director of the facility.

Although the entire renovated facility will not be open until Fall 2006, much of the current building will still be accessible. The pool and two basketball courts will remain open, along with cardiovascular equipment on the third basketball court, and the weight room downstairs. The racquetball courts will be closed until next fall.

Activities will also take place in other areas of campus, including the Fitwell Studio in William and Mary Hall.

When the new facility is complete, the Sports and Recreational Facility will be an entirely new experience. There will be two multipurpose rooms for various classes. A multi-activity court will be available, made ready for indoor soccer, volleyball, and basketball. The three existing basketball courts will continue to serve the student population. A 3,000 sq. foot weight room will replace the existing one. There will be three racquetball courts and one squash court, completely renovated and with back walls made entirely of glass.

Three new additions will revolutionize the facility: The first is a juice bar to serve the students who use the facility. The second is a massage therapy and fitness training room. This will give students the opportunity to measure their fitness level before and after training. The third exciting new addition will be a 23-foot rock-climbing wall, spread over two walls and able to hold ten climbers at a time.

After the renovations of the 2005-2006 school year, the Sports and Recreational Facility will become an entirely new place to get fit.

Fire Safety Tips

DO NOT:

- Place combustible materials, such as clothing or paper, on lamps or light bulbs.
- Store any flammable liquids in Building.
- Use extension cords as permanent wiring.
- Use candles.
- Block or store ANYTHING in hallway and stairways.
- Place combustible materials, such as clothing or paper, on lamps or light bulbs.
- Overload electrical circuits
- Disturb ceiling tiles or penetrate ceilings.

Reduce, reuse: Recycling on campus will not only improve environment but it will also save school money.

it throughout the campus. Several members of the school administration including Dave Shepard, Deb Boykin, and Anna Martin also worked with the SA to develop a plan deemed fair to both the students and administration. Floyd says that the recycling program should be up and running in September.

This year should also see a new chapter in the relationship between the College and the City. The Public Affairs Department and its new chief, Jhett Nelson, have several important issues to deal with this year. Of main importance are student voting issues, businesses that are tailored towards students, and greater dialogue between city officials and students of the college. Several meetings have already been held between members of the SA and Williamsburg City officials.

With the many new developments in the Student Assembly, many freshman and maybe some upperclassmen may be wondering how they can become involved with their student government. One great way to get involved is through elected office. This year’s freshman elections are being held on September 15. If running for office isn’t your thing then the class councils, especially First Year Council, are highly recommended. First Year Council is an independent agency that helps the newly elected freshman class officers run the many events and fundraisers throughout freshman year. For more information on this and any other student government topic please go to: http://sa.wm.edu.

Grounds have a workout: The Rec Center will be under renovation until next fall, but will still be operational with limited services.
