On to Richmond!

Can it be true that the students of William and Mary have developed an interest in the political scene? More interesting is the fact that all students are claiming to be informed about the national election speeches, and all are available for such discussions. So the political atmosphere has been intensified in this time by the excitement of the nation's most representative elections.

Students, faculty, and staff are interested in the political events of today. It is quite common to see a great number of people reading Washington papers, or listening to the radio commentaries. The political discussions in the campus are often heated, and it is not uncommon to hear students expressing their views on the national and international scene.

The political interest is not limited to the students. Faculty members are also active participants in the political life of the college. They are closely following the political developments in the country and are expressing their opinions on the issues of the day.

The political atmosphere is not only reflected in the discussions but also in the events that take place on the campus. The students have organized political clubs and have been active in the election campaigns of the candidates of their choice.

The political interest is not only confined to the students. The faculty members, staff, and even the alumni are actively participating in the political life of the college. They are closely following the political developments in the country and are expressing their opinions on the issues of the day.
